

On the floor of the House of Representatives, I expressed my strong support for the Consumer Financial Protection Agency, as envisioned by former U.T. Law Professor Elizabeth Warren. Today, we have the opportunity to create a new squad of financial cops who will work to protect those living on Main Street from the greed we've seen from Wall Street. Congress finally has the chance to stand up not for the banks they said were 'too big to fail,' but for America's working families, who are far too important to fail, and that is exactly what I urged my colleagues to do. To see my full remarks, please click here .